

On October 15, 2003 China successfully launched Shenzhou-5, its first manned spacecraft, into orbit. China thus became the third country in the world to independently carry out manned space activities. Yang Liwei was China's first astronaut to orbit the earth.